Electronics

Electronics are a fast-growing portion of America's trash - with 250 million computers destined to become obsolete by 2005. Computers and computer components contain hazardous material such as lead, mercury, and other hazardous chemicals computer monitors can contain as much as 5 pounds of lead! Currently there are no state regulations on residential computer disposal. We have listed some possible options for safe disposal of your computer components.

What you can do:

1. Can the equipment be reused? If it is not in working order can it be repaired, refurbished, or used for parts to build or repair other systems?
2. Is there a charity organization that might be able to use the working equipment?
3. Contact the manufacturer for information on their recycling or buyback programs.

For example, Dell is committed to meet your needs, not only when you buy and own computers, but also when you are ready to dispose of them. As an environmentally responsible company, Dell provides an affordable and convenient reuse and recycling program - environmentally friendly, easy to use, and low cost (continental U.S. only).
